| US3R317265 | 10-JAN-21_14:12:33 | No.50123 | This is an even more in depth lockdown than even I imagined. As the compliant and unquestioning police take their orders way out of context, the media are doubling down on figures that are totally extraordinary. They can't square the ridiculous 'case' numbers and supposed hospitalisations with the anecdotal evidence that is all over the social media. I think you may find that the less people want these vaccines, the harder the Twitter/Facebook regimes will double down on the bans. I believe the free speech platforms are also being targeted by ISPs, but I'm not up to date with how all that works. |
| US3R_TORCH | 10-JAN-21_14:14:00 | No.50124 | Question: why has the UK 'allegedly' ordered up to 367 million doses of vaccines? That would be enough to inject every living person in the UK up to six times over! What's that about? |
| US3R317265 | 10-JAN-21_14:16:26 | No.50125 | When I was in discussion over the logistical roll-out of mass vaccination, the complexity of numbers within a time-dependent framework became frankly overwhelming. The only way that vaccination centres can work at all, is if the take-up of volunteers from the general public to be vaccinated, is low enough to store, stabilise and prepare vaccine doses within the correct window of usage, and then have the public and their related paperwork to hand, exactly when it's needed. If a lot people suddenly decided they wanted to be jabbed, the system would not work at all and there would first of all be the embarrassing problem of non-socially distanced crowds waiting for a shot. Secondly, the logistics of flying in, distributing and storing these unstable vaccines is not as rosy as the picture painted by the media. The slightest fluctuation in storage conditions renders the vaccines unusable, and the potential waste of millions of doses is very real. Of course, to try and mitigate waste, the shipments are in batches of a thousand, which brings its own problems. Individually temperature controlled containers for just a couple of million doses. And of course, they're gambling on having the volunteers available to be jabbed. |
| US3R_TORCH | 10-JAN-21_14:17:35 | No.50126 | What about the take-up rate of vaccination among the hospital staff? 'Health Care Workers', if you like. |
| US3R317265 | 10-JAN-21_14:18:01 | No.50127 | That information is being internalised under the guise of hospital employees coming within the local Health Authorities' data privacy controls. Whatever the media are reporting will be something they've 'sourced' for themselves and will contain suitable caveats about unnamed sources, speculation and anecdote. I'm sure if the data was good, the media would be blaring official (and checkable) government figures from the front pages. |
| US3R_TORCH | 10-JAN-21_14:18:15 | No.50128 | As it is, they either say nothing or put out something vague and deniable. Right? What about the Queen? In your opinion - just your opinion - did she have the vaccine, or is that just showbusiness? |
| US3R317265 | 10-JAN-21_14:19:45 | No.50129 | Obviously, I don't know, but from colleagues in years past who have dealt with high profile cases, I would honestly say that no member of the royal family would be given an untested vaccination either for a disease they haven't got, or as a publicity stunt to manipulate the public. The fact that the newspapers are reporting this event, tells you as much as you need to know about how high up this Covid operation goes. I think if you knew what the Queen and the extended royal family have been told about this apparent pandemic, you'd be amazed at how isolated from the reality of this country's management they really are. |
