US3R_CAM01	17-JUN-20_19:19:41	No.43171	Hi. Told you we'd get back. At some stage soon, we've got to stop talking about the day to day monkey business of the coronavirus thing. There's no longer any doubt about <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) Where it came from 2) How many strains there originally were 3) Who was likely behind it 4) What the effects of it have been in terms of people's health (mental and physical) or what it's done to the economies of the developed world. Frankly, I could start one of these Bitchute interview shows with all the eyewitnesses that are coming forward on the internet with bits of information that no longer seem to be worth hiding. The media's leaking like a sieve and the truth that's popping up probably won't be enough to get anyone fired any more. Most importantly, on a global scale, this has all been hashed over endlessly on talk shows and blogs on every continent. The only value, as I see it, in continuing to fill the bucket, is to try and reach a tipping point where the mainstream media can ignore it no longer. All of them, Fauci, Gates, and the institutions have changed and subverted their own narratives back and forth as the mood of the public is judged and the political points can be scored. Government papers (Germany, the US) have all called the nature of the political story behind this by acknowledging that the current figures (even unadjusted) are showing a massive overreaction from national administrations. That it's by design, (rather than incompetence), is becoming more likely by the day, so my question right now, is what might be the end game?
US3R288462	17-JUN-20_19:23:11	No.43172	^43171 Vaccinations. And the track and trace that goes with it.
US3R391417	17-JUN-20_19:23:48	No.43173	^43171 I think local politics, country politics is the sideshow now. Big pharma and their patents are probably driving this from the front. Look at the Gates Foundation and their "work" in Africa and India. See how that can dovetail into western economics.
US3R_CAM01	17-JUN-20_19:24:30	No.43174	^43172 The end game. I've been saying that to understand this event, we need to work out what the goal is. If we could see that ahead of time, we'd know why it was happening in the first place.
US3R181104	17-JUN-20_19:25:35	No.43175	There's a worry that the media are going to keep it going until the flu season starts and there's a load of new hysteria about it. Worse, there's some new research on the mutation of the virus coming out of Scripps that says the natural mutation of the original virus is actually now more infectious.
US3R264218	17-JUN-20_19:27:12	No.43176	^43172 ^43173 The pharmaceutical companies are chasing the virus around to justify some cure-all vaccine. Whatever they come up with they've got to get it past the FDA. Britain is coming up with its own nonsense, and at the same time ordering up huge quantities of untested drugs from Astrazeneca. If the idea of a credible vaccine goes pear-shaped, then it might explain why the UK tracing app is now being shelved. They're saying it's not priority, which sounds like doublespeak for back-burner. My impression is that the take-up by the public was luke warm and the Isle of Wight trial was less than spectacular. They'll never tell you that of course.
US3R_CAM01	17-JUN-20_19:28:33	No.43177	^43175 Before we get within 'sniffing' distance of the flu season, there's going to be Trump rallies before the election. Check out the hypocrisy of the riots, which are all given the green light by the media, and the outrage over the 'no social distancing' of a million Trump fans in Ohio!

US3R391417	17-JUN-20_19:30:22	No.43178	I'd be concerned about the essentially left wing influence of the Health Authorities and how they influence the policy in the hospitals. It's easy to say that you can't be too cautious and come up with platitudes about losing even one life is unacceptable, but there is the greater concern of closing down the entire economy for disproportionate reasons.
US3R181104	17-JUN-20_19:31:01	No.43179	^43177 It's going to be a big operation if the plan to stop Trump means using the whole world to do it. That's supervillain stuff.
US3R_CAM01	17-JUN-20_19:31:56	No.43180	This just in. Two UK universities have let their 'professors' off the leash to say that social distancing was always basically a psyop, and has more to do with signalling your obedience than being hygienic. Jefferson and Heneghan from Oxford University and one from University of Dundee admit there's no scientific evidence to support it and should never have been done. Big development, but no doubt to be ignored by the media who are still in favour of the lockdown.
US3R264218	17-JUN-20_19:32:04	No.43181	^43178 Apathy worries me more than left wing activism. A few bad people can do a lot with a whole herd of sheep. At the moment Britain appears to be one of, and maybe, the most zealous over shutting down the country. It looks like we're already going to have the most mis-registered deaths as a proportion of the natural annual deaths. We won't know until the figures are out - if we trust them. The only hope is to keep informing people and helping them to find out the facts for themselves. Even then, it may be a losing battle if apathy is too entrenched.
