US3R226451	27-OCT-20_01:14:26	No.47410	Our British vocational professions are in a parlous state of decay. Including, but not limited to the medical profession, science, policing and 'care', we are producing a very cynical agenda through the agglomeration of corporate mandates that are presented to government as 'solutions' for the administration of state services. It is a spiral of decay, where the overriding importance of moral and social commitment is suborned beneath the effectiveness of delivering a political direction.
US3R825810	27-OCT-20_01:15:02	No.47411	Is this an identity thing? A national identity crisis. Apart from the self-loathing brigade and the political destructivists who shill for the corporations, are there factors at play that we can do something about? The police thing is tricky.
US3R492762	27-OCT-20_01:18:33	No.47412	^47410 If we ever get out from under this cloud of world domination, what would we need to do to ensure that this never happens again? This comes up all the time.
US3R226451	27-OCT-20_01:22:39	No.47413	My most pressing concern, and one that I have asked questions about, is the undermining of rules governing the national constitution. There is some concern over the introduction of foreign security services into the civilian police force. It can't be the numbers, as the country is hardly in a state of civil war, or even widespread unrest. It is most likely a tactic used to ensure that unreasonable demands on the police who may question their role in upholding poorly-defined laws, are negated by foreign nationals doing private security work with the blessing of the Home Office. If this is the case, we have a situation that might be interpreted as foreign troops on the streets of Britain, which is an even less welcome prospect than our own troops going door to door on city streets.
US3R118743	27-OCT-20_01:22:59	No.47414	^47412 You're not supposed to get out from under. They keep hammering this 'no return to normal' and even Gates has said that people are going to need continuous vaccination just to be able to travel. Was it Fauci who said that mask-wearing was going to be forever from now on, and all the social distancing bollocks? Short of a revolution, we're all going to end up in covid camps.
US3R226451	27-OCT-20_01:24:49	No.47415	^47412 Unfortunately, the obvious legal route to redefine freedoms in peacetime and to lock them into a constitutional framework, is too easy to subvert. Look at the way a 'national emergency' has just removed all personal freedom that has taken several hundred years to derive. After the second world war, the Nuremburg declaration of human rights, especially where medical procedure is involved, should have been the last word on the matter, but as you can see, when the public are no longer aware of their past, and therefore unable to quote the rules that should protect them, the country itself has become prey for the same old tactics from history. We will need something more than the law to protect ourselves. That is not a satisfactory conclusion to your question, and not one that I put forward lightly.
