

Larp Rising

US3R166738	30-SEP-20_21:33:41	No.6401	I don't want to appear to be buying into your 'Random Skies' scenario completely, but it bears mentioning that the folly of bringing in a petrol vehicle ban from 2030, would only make sense if firstly, the market for oil was becoming more difficult to service, and secondly, if the civilisation-makers expect to be dealing with a lot less people on the planet. Yes, it would require giant leaps in battery technology and manufacture to make it workable on even a small scale, but it would also presuppose that oil will become an exclusive industrial chemical. No market, no money. No need for consumer petrol technology.
